NEW TOPICS 2003 – 2004 (1)

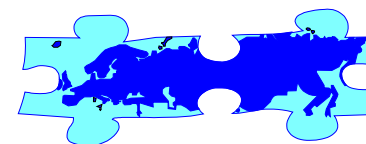

BACKGROUND

- The process of political decentralization in Europe from the national level to the regions moves simultaneously with the important enlargement of the European Union.
- Twenty-five per cent of European countries have a population of less than 5 million inhabitants which corresponds to many of the average sized European regions.
- Cross European cooperation is no longer an isolated experience among political entities, both at national and regional levels, but becomes a necessity for the future of Europe.
- The cross border experiences of the Regions in the health sector is anticipating the future method of collaboration between European States.

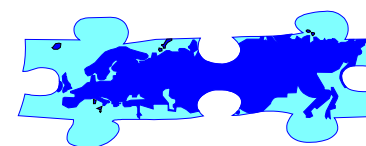

NEW TOPICS 2003 – 2004 (2)

- The regional health care systems are confronted more and more with European health challenges:
 - free circulation of patients and health workers.
 - European common emergency numbers.
 - The migration of retired persons from North to South Europe and tourists travelling throughout Europe are creating an enormous impact in hospitals in tourist areas.
 - Cross-European Cooperation
 - A common European public health strategy.
- Regions are in the front line anticipating solutions for health care assistance and services to all Europeans.

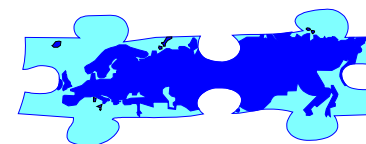

Possibili aree di collaborazione tra le Reti:

- Promozione della salute
- Determinanti della salute/Investimenti in salute
- Confronto fra modelli di collaborazione istituzionale Regioni-Comuni (es.: piani di zona, patti per la salute, ecc.)
- Cooperazione transfrontaliera
- Progettazione europea
